QUARTIER LATIN PASSING AWAY

The Quartier Latin, Paris, where is it? So thinned out and scattered that only the few who have grown gray in its shade recognize it, perhaps by a few words spoken in some out of the way cafe, or by the sight of some magic riame over a doorway, feeling sure that wheresoever dwelleth the owner of the name there will be found kindred souls imparting some of the brilliancy, life and ease that made the atmosphere of the ancient Quartier Latin so rich in the ancient Quartier Latin so rich in the charm of great thoughts lightly spoken. Now, slas! In that part of Paris that should be at least sacred to the name of "Quartier Latin." we hear that we are in the Anglo-American quarter, and our ears and eyes tell us it is true. English, English, on every side—the varied English of England, the soft intenation of the Southern United States, mixed in with the voice that take us both North and West, All pleasant sounds enough. And yet how heavy grows the heart of a true lover of old Paris as it was, on the left bank of the solue.

Taris as it was, on the left bank of the Scine.

Nevertheless, in a different way, how fascinating the left bank of the Scine still is, filled with art lovers from all the world—a vertiable little town of itself, so cosmopolitan and happy-go-lucky with the spirit of comradeship that a struggle with the world so often gives. Where a student, meeting a possible stranger or a fellow student unknown to him or her except by sight, sits and chats an hour or so in the lovely gardens of the Luxembours, the Champs Blyses of the Latin quarter, filled with artists hard at work in the steady morning light, and with children with their gayly ribboned nurses in the afternoon, intent on feeding the beautiful pigeons or listening with little rapt faces to the doings of Punch and Judy, ever dear to the sons and daughters of Paris.

Genius and Poverty.

Genius and Poverty.

Then possibly comes an invitation from one student to go home and take a little supper in one of the many studios nearby, usually up many a flight of uncarpeted stairs to the roof, or else on the ground floor, the intervening floors being beyond the means of the average student and usually rented by some well-to-do bourgeois, whose wife spends her days superintending the cooking of savory dishes that fill with envy the soul of our student, whose frugal meal is often cooked on a little oil lamp that does double duty as cooking stove and house warmer, for gas and many other little conveniences are still amongst the unheard of in many of the old houses that the students are found, cooking, living, sleeping in the one tiny room, graced with the name of studio—some being worthy indeed of the name, in their pleturesque disorder, with here and there a treasure alsoevered in one of the many curosity shops that tempt one on every side, overflowing with their bric-a-brac on to the very pavenent.

For the student who has not to practice the most rigid economy there are the many cafes and rostaurants, where for a franc or so a good, hot, well served meal can be had, with bread and wine included. I have in mind a little restaurant of two rooms, one originally a studio, the walls of which have been delightfully meal can be had, with bread and wine included. I have in mind a little restaurant of two rooms, one originally a studio, the walls of which have been delightfully treated, giving us in soft iones original studies from the old familiar Mother Goose rhymes. These paintings are the work of two girls away from home, and who, not wishing to write for money, yet having to live—their little flat having fortunately been paid for in advance—suggested to the rosy-cheeked woman who was both proprietross and cook, that they should paint her walls while she gave them the good meals that have won for this white-capped, rosy-faced old dame many a friend. And so an evil moment was successfully pussed. The other room has his wall, decorated with sketches, poemic passers, etc., given by patrons, many of whose names have become famous. The little restaurant is still there, but Henriette has retired and but Henriette has retired and still there, but Henriette has retired and taken with her the beloved book wherein only the favored few were permitted to write, and how great we all felt that privilege to be, and well we might, for therein are many names that autograph collectors would give much for.

Amongst other places of amusement there still remains the once famous "Bail Builles," of ancient fame, when every week the students of the quarter gave a dance to the pretty washerwomen of Paris. Nowadays it is hardly more than a music hall, though occasionally some great model is feted there, or an act from some popular play is given-impromptu and with spirt. It is, however, one of the many scenes of gayety that strikes the eye of the traveler, making him feel that Paris is in truth nothing but a pleaure loving place, even here, with the students and the poor. But there are as those who think well know, the hours of hard work and drudgery and disappointment—days when your pleture comes back from the salon across the river, rejected again. Then, too, the hundred and one inconveniences of daily life that make it so hard even for the bravest of the students, who leave their homes over here to find what they had considered necessities are now luxuries. In the early winter mornings the wonder is if it be worth while, but when night comes, for night is the golden hour for all Paris, with a good day's work behind and the streets all ablaze with the lights from theatres and warm cafes, it makes one happy again. One realizes how to be admired is the Frenchman who does his best and then is getting the best out of this beautiful world, that was surely made for happiness.

The county roads in this section were never in finer condition than at present; they are comparatively free from rocks, ruts and hills, much to the delight and comfort of those who travel over them. Twelve months ago an experiment was made on a very muddy section of the turppike, by giving it a coating of about six inches of slag from the cement works. At first it was quite rough, but in less over which the school children amble and over which the school endered amble and frelic, like rabbits on a frosty moonlight night. ### The Value of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful It is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleanish purpose. Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

the complexion; it whitens the teeth, and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and howels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of caturth.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the linest powdered Willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, is weeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it, is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the beenits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients is suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost, but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets." And how true this is No blunders require such severe toll as those we commit against our physical well-being. Wet feet, irregular meals, late hours, over work or over play all contribute to the general disturbance. There is no sufficient reason why such a vast proportion of our women should suffer as they do from female trouble. Dr. R. V.
